

Festively Celebrating Clinical Engineering Week at Huntington Hospital

The Clinical Technology department at Huntington Memorial Hospital, Pasadena, CA will festively celebrate the Clinical Engineering Week in May. The celebrations already started with a presentation on clinical engineering profession and innovative infusion technologies in healthcare at the University California State, Long Beach by the director of the Clinical Technology on May 4, 2011. The presentation introduced many undergraduate and graduate students to the field of clinical engineering.

At Huntington Hospital, the Clinical Technology department is planning on hosting a clinical technology booth in the main hospital cafeteria during the clinical engineering week. The booth will be staffed by the clinical technology staff and will display diverse medical equipment with different demonstrations as well as educational handouts for those that visit the booth. A special poster is being designed to display the department's picture and the department's mission. The poster will be displayed at the booth.

The department was fortunate to have one of its staff members featured in the AAMI News. Elisha Brooks, Senior Clinical Technology technician will be recognized for his exceptional customer service during this very special week.

The Clinical Technology department is always ready to support the diverse equipment and patient safety initiatives at Huntington Hospital and will end off the clinical engineering week with a great celebratory lunch!

Happy Clinical Engineering Week to all!
